A COMPLICATED CASE

It Resulted From an Endeavor to Make a Match

By F. A. MITCHEL A......

Suits for breach of promise are not always the vulgar affairs to which we are accustomed, though I admit that many which are made public are not sweet smelling.

Kate Devereaux was my chum in the woman's college, and I confess she fascinated me. Girls who have brothers are fond of picking out wives for them, and it usually happens that the brother doesn't see the matter in the same light as the sister at all. When I told Ralph that I proposed to make a match for him with my college chum he showed no interest in the proposition

"Wait till you see her," I said to him. "If she is as homely and uninteresting as most of the girls you have picked out for me," he replied, "I don't want to see her."

I invited Kate to spend the spring recess with me. I had been just as stupid in telling her that I had a brother for her as I had been in telling Ralph that I had a chum for him, though my plan was rather a fancy than a serious intention. I was quite curious to see how these two persons who had been thus informed would greet each other. Ralph and I went to the station to meet my guest, and I did not have a good opportunity to see how they were impressed with each other. After our return home I said to Ralph: "Well, what do you think of her?"

"She's not so homely as the rest of your favorites," was his only reply. I asked Kate if she did not think my brother a fine fellow, and she said, "Very nice," but in an indifferent tone, We were all together for two weeks, with other young persons of our bunch, but I could not see that Ralph and Kate were especially interested in each other. Ralph seemed rather to favor another girl and Kate another man. It struck me that I had made a new fallure in picking out a wife for Ralph, but, as I have said, my doing so was not a matter of great concern to me. and I thought no more about it.

Kate and I went back to college, and since we were to graduate in June, we were absorbed in our preparations for the final exams and commencement. Ralph came to see me graduate. Kate took part in the graduating exercises of the class, and I asked Raiph if she didn't look very sweet in her pure white costume. He replied indifferently that all girl graduates looked sweet. Kate invited me to spend a few weeks with her after our graduation. and we left college together. The day after our arrival at her home Kate took me into her room and said to me:

"Estelle, I have a very unplement announcement to make to you. "Do tell me what it is!" I said, catching my breath. "I am going to bring a suit against your brother for breach of promise of marriage."

I looked at her with as much amaze ment as if she had drawn a pistol and Well, I had no sooner gone to your house for the spring recess than Ralph began to make love to me. Fortunately I did not trust him and showed little interest. When we returned to college he wrote me letters repeating what he had said to me. We met several times after that-without your knowledgeand I accepted him. I have no doubt now that he was simply desirous to make a conquest, for when he came on at commencement be treated me very coolly, not mentioning our engagement. Now, don't you think, dear, that such treatment merits punishment?"

"I certainly do, but"-"But what?"

"Estelle, you are barking back to ime when we women were expected to suffer any treatment from men they felt disposed to give us and hide our stings of grief or recentment under a bushel. A time has come when such self abnequation has passed. I take this step not because I wish to—indeed, on your account especially I dread it—but because I deem it my buty to do so." I could not but stimm that in principle Kate was right, but in this particular instance cometling must be done to stop such a proceeding. I cut short my risit, returning home at once. I called Ralph into the library, where we were alone, and after telling him that I tnew of his outrageous conduct I told him that Kate in justice to her sex was about to bring suft against him for breach of promise.

"How much damage does she claim?" he asked imperturbably.
"Halph!" I cried. "What do you mean? You don't mean that you are going to let this disgraceful conduct stand; that you intend to keep up this fishonorable treatment?

"What can I do? You tell me that "What can I do? You tell me that you wish me to marry your college shum. You bring ber home with you for racation. She, having been informed by you that I am to make love to her and marry her, acts accordingly. I act accordingly too. She takes it all seriously, whereas we waste both deferring to your wishes."

"Oh, Ralph!"

"Fortunately," he continued, "I am perfectly able to satisfy her claim if it is not unreasonable. My railway bonds will do that. I shall certainly do everything I can to keep the matter out of court. If your bosom friend does not shrink from publicity I do. There is no need for the lady to expose her lacerated feelings to a lawyer. Let her tell you what is the damage done, and I will pay." Could this be my brother Ralph, whom I had always regarded the soul of honor? My astonishment was as great as at learning that Kate Devereaux, who, it had appeared to me, possessed the soul of a true woman, should make a money demand as compensation for having been trifled with. But Kate had justice as a motive. Ralph so far as I could see had no ground whatever to stand on.

"Ralph," I said, "this is the most aw ful thing that has ever happened to me. What can I do to stop it?"

"What can you do, Puss?"-Puss was his pet name for me-"you can get your friend's terms. I will pay and that will end the matter."

"But are you content to remain in such a position? Think how it will injure you. Kate showed me your letters, they are full of ardent love." "She will not show them to any one

"How do you know?" "Because she is not that kind of a girl."

This gave me a ray of hope. Ralph thus far had spoken no word of blame for Kate, and it was evident that he respected her. And his letters to her showed plainly that he had loved her. "What brought about your change of feeling for her?" I asked.

"That would be telling. I am quite willing that you should pick out a wife for me, but after bringing about a complication I am not willing to be cate chised by you as to my action or my feelings in the matter. But for any wrongdoing, I am willing to pay."

There was much more talk upon the matter between Ralph and me, but I got no more out of him than I have given here. There seemed nothing else for me to do but see Kate again and endeavor to placate her in some way and persuade her that it was not her duty to take the drastic measure she intended. She lived not more than fifty miles from me, and I left Ralph to take my car and run over for another conference.

She received me apparently with no great concern. She did not act like a woman whose heart had been broken or one who desired revenge. As to making money out of my brother, I knew that was absurd. I attributed her action merely to principle, to conscientious motives, the protection of her sex against unjust treatment from man. Since I had come back to her so soon, she evidently expected that I had something to tell her, and she waited chatting upon unimportant mattersfor me to do so.

"Kate," I said, "I have had a long talk with Ralph and have received no explanation of his treatment of you. The only thing I can get out of him is that he is ready to pay any reasonable amount within his capabilities that you may name. But I cannot conceive of your accepting a money consideration for such an injury."

"I can give the amount to charity," said Kate, it seemed to me rather seand the second state of the first of the verely,

"Are you sure," I said, "that there is nothing vindictive in your action?" "Nothing of the kind. I simply wish ordered me to throw up my hands. to teach one man that he cannot treat

"You may remember what you said stances is their affair, not mine." er women do under similar circum-mains but for you to name the sum you claim and for me to name the amount to Ralph."

Kate made no reply to this at once, but at last said: "I think the matter can be settled between the principals better than through a third party." I caught at this at once and asked if I should say to Ralph that she would consent to a conference with him. She consented to this with apparent reluctance. It occurred to me that I could as well communicate this over the telephone and, going to the instrument, I

"Kate thinks that it would be best "Tin surprised that you should think for her to give you her terms of sett: of making the affair public." ment personally. Come over and 8.3

click that I knew shut me off. When I informed Kate of this she looked troubled. After some deliberation she went to the telephone herself. There was no booth inclosing it, and I could not help bearing what she said, though of course I heard no replies. What seemed of greatest impostance

"I didn't give ther rose to Mr. Hatha-way. He took it without my permis-sion."

"Yes, I admit that in most have seem ed very wrong to you for me to give away a rose that you had given me."

"Then you'll be over for luncheon?"
"For heaven's cake." I exclaimed when Kate rejoined me. "Has all this racket been about so small a matter?" "It wasn't a small matter at all. Ralph gave me a rose. Another man took it, and Ralph saw him wearing it. Ralph, instead of coming to me for an explanation, treated me shamefully."
I didn't wait for Ralph's coming. The

I didn't wait for Ralph's coming. The lovers had no further use for me.

I wish it distinctly understood that I do not claim to have made this match. Indeed, I was as far from it as one could possibly be. Both Ralph and Kate fooled me completely. Just hink of these two, who happened to fall in love with each other and were both desperately caught, talking about a monetary consideration for wounded affection! And the cause—could anything be more ridiculous?
